City Court News

Noble Hill was arrested Sunday night by acting City Marshal T. J. Wring on a warrant charging him with grand larceny by stealing a pistol from a drawer in the grocery store of R. M. Williams on Depot Street. He was placed under a $200 bond and sent to jail to await examination.

Tuesday morning Hill was brought before City Judge A. M. Gilbert and waived an examining trial. The court reduced the charge from grand to petty larceny and reduced his bond to $100 and sent him to jail to await the action of the grand jury at the next term of Circuit Court.

For several years Noble Hill was carrier on Rural Route 1, being the first rural route carrier in this county.

Denver Travis was arrested Sunday night on a charge of drunkenness and placed in jail Monday morning. He was tried before City Judge A. M. Gilbert and given a fine of $5.00.

Court House News

County Judge E. Jeffrey Travis reports that Saturday was a very busy day in his court. Thirty-seven warrants for arrest were issued, besides eight executions on replevin bonds.

L. V. Dempsey has been appointed Oil Inspector to take the place of C. B. Duval, whose term of office expired January 2.

Charles Lathrop has been recommended to Governor Morrow for appointment to fill the vacancy made in the office of Justice of the Peace in the Union Magisterial District by the resignation of L. V. Howard, who was elected to the office at the regular November election.

REVIVAL MEETING CLOSED

The series of revival meetings at the Main Street Presbyterian church closed Sunday evening. Rev. E. N. Hart, pastor of the church, and who did all the preaching, dedicated himself to the members of his church and the people generally by his fine sermons and genial personality.

The congregations throughout were good and much interest was shown in the services.

MONUMENT ERECTED

A splendid monument has just been erected on the lot of J. F. Boyd in the New Cemetery. It is a double monument for both Mr. Loyd and his wife. This is one of the large monuments in this cemetery and is a beautiful one. It was made from the rough stone at the works of Henry and Henry.

WILL MOVE TO DENVER

From the Grand Junction Sentinel we learn that Mr. R. H. Walker, an attorney of that city and a former Marion boy, will shortly leave his home city of Grand Junction, Colorado and move to Denver.

Mr. Walker has for ten years been recognized as one of the leading attorneys in that part of his state and his many friends here wish him an abundance of success in his new home.

Mr. Walker will be remembered by our citizens as "Hick," one of the younger sons of Mr. R. T. Walker, who removed from here to Grand Junction several years ago.

DISSOLUTION NOTICE

C. W. HAYNES, President

Marion Graded School Is Thankful

The advantages of a separate building for the graded school are many, because the High School and the grades have entirely different interests and ambitions. I can remember when we were in the second and third grades we used to be exasperated because we had to sit for half an hour in Chapel and listen to the principal talk to the High School. We didn't think it fair for the teacher to say we couldn't wiggle or move our feet when to us the talk seemed as dry as the Sahara desert. It was doubtful if we listened, but we were not interested in football and other things that we to make up the life of the High School. Of course there were times when the talk was all dressed to us and I do not doubt but that the older ones were bored terribly.

And then, when Marion school began to grow, and so many boys and girls began to come in from the country for the upper grades and for the High School, we began to be crowded out of our rooms and in the auditorium. This was really a good sign for it showed that the people of Crittenden county were waking up to the necessity of education as they never had before. It had its drawback, however, for we had to be packed in our rooms like sardines in a can. Of course, it was harder to keep good discipline in our crowded condition than it would be if we had plenty of room, for we just couldn't keep from talking when someone was so close to talk to. And of course we could not study when there was confusion.

Aside from our overcrowded difficulties the play ground was in an inadequate place. Even when you think of putting five hundred and forty people in our small play ground you can imagine that there was no room to spare.

Another demonstration of the awakening school spirit was the assistance the School Improvement Club gave us. They repaired the seventh grade room and remodeled the noisy looking auditorium, changing it from a dreary looking place to one of the most beautiful school auditoriums in the state, besides many other helpful improvements.

Then came the eventful day when the voters were to decide whether they would have both the grades and High School to do their best at whether they would leave it to a stranger along as best we could without aid from them. Our years of waiting were at an end, for they raised gloriously in our aid.

Now we may have two play rooms, which will make it much more pleasant. We can have the same use of the basketball court so that we can be better players when we reach High School and perhaps some time Marion will be proud of its winning team for the grades have some very promising players.

We realize that Marion is expecting some good work from us in response to the kindness they have shown us and we are trying not to disappoint them.

The other day Mr. Jaggors came over to our building and told us that he appreciated the improvement we had made in our order. He also told us that the High School was making us a race, that they too are trying to prove themselves worthy of the kindness the citizens of Marion have shown us in providing a separate building for the High School.

We shall take for our motto the verse by Ernest Neal.

Attempt the highest, Neither far,
To steadily gaining or a star
Than by a slow, sure, honest toil,
To follow on our brother's lead.

Farm Bureau News

At the annual meeting of the Farm Bureau recently held at the school building a program for the ensuing year was adopted. The most important lines of work in the county that need improving were listed and the work of the Farm Bureau and the County Agent will be directed largely along these lines.

The program follows:

The improvement of dairying thru: better sires, milk records, balanced feeding, tuberculosis testing.

The enrollment of 150 Junior Agricultural Club members.

The improvement of poultry thru: pure bred stock, proper care, feeding and housing.

The improvement of orchards thru: demonstration orchards in various parts of the county.

Wool and better sheep, thru: Juniors club work and the placing of 10 pure bred rams.

The spreading of 1000 tons of limestone in 1922. Vigorous pushing of the better sires, better stock campaign.

The holding of an annual Farm Bureau Picnic.

Tobacco Seed Treatment

Indications are that many Kentucky tobacco growers will try seed treatment during the coming season in an effort to control wildfire and mosaic leaf spot, the two most serious diseases of tobacco.

The treatment which gives promise of controlling the seed disease free involves the use of bichloride of mercury which is being recommended in preference to formaldehyde as the latter resulted in some injury last year when the seed was not thoroughly washed. The seed is soaked for 15 minutes in a solution made up of one part of bichloride and 1000 parts of water after which it is washed thoroughly in several changes of clean water. Metal containers can not be used in the soaking process. After the soaking and washing the seed is dried quickly by placing it in a coarse cloth bag and swinging it around at arm's length several times to remove the surplus water, after which it is spread out in a thin layer. The bichloride of mercury tablets are ordinarily sold of the strength that one tablet to a pint of water will make the one to one thousand strength solution. Be very careful of bichloride of mercury as it is a poison.

A number of farmers have secured spray charts at the County Agent's office telling when to spray and what to use. The County Agent's office days are Saturday. If interested come and get a spray chart.

Tuberculin Testing

Mr. Schneider, Deputy State Veterinarian, tested approximately 250 head of cattle last week in Crittenden county. Four reacting animals were found and they will be disposed of at once. A later test will be made in the spring and every one interested is urged to get in touch with the County Agent.

The Graduating Class of Forest Grove community will have part in the program at our next community meeting, Thursday Feb. 9. Rev. J. P. Price will deliver an address and Prof. John Young Brown of Marion High School will also talk.

LUCKY FOR HENRY THAT HE BELONGS TO THIS AGE

Most of us are glad we weren't born 300 years ago, but S. S. Henry, the great magician who appears in Marion at the School Auditorium on Monday evening, Feb. 6, has a special reason.

"How on earth could I have made a living then?" he inquires. "About my first trick and they would have burned me at the stake."

Of course Henry is a magician. But his magic isn't the black variety. It's the white variety, tinged with sunshine and good humor. This talented man from the minute he takes the stage keeps his audience in a state of constant bewilderment. "How does he do it?" the people ask as he passes rapidly from mystery to mystery, from novelty to novelty, and from surprise to surprise.

In addition to mysterious and unfathomable tricks for which he is noted, Henry is also an artist and his lightning sketches in colored crayons and sand will be thoroughly enjoyed.

Few magicians have enjoyed the success which has been Henry's the past few seasons. He is recognized today as one at the head of his profession, for his program is not only a standard magic entertainment but it possesses distinctly original features which are seldom enjoyed by Lyceum folks.

FARMERS SHOULD RAISE MORE GOOD UTILITY HORSES

Federal Authorities State That Horses Are More Economical on Farms Than Motorized Tractors or Trucks—An Infusion of Thoroughbred Blood Gives Spirit, Vigor And Endurance To All Breeds

There is now a recognized "horse sense" where short hauls and frequent stops are necessary in both city and country into which the truck and tractor cannot enter and compete with the horse without loss to the merchant and the farmer. After a recent experiment the horse is coming into its own, displacing the motorized truck and tractor particularly on the farm where it has been conclusively demonstrated that there is economy in breeding a suitable type of horse for a varied agricultural service.

At a recent meeting in Chicago of the Horse Association of America, H.
C. Taylor, Chief of the Federal Bureau of Farm Markets, presented some interesting figures, the result of official investigations, proving that horses are more economical in every kind of operation on farms than the motorized tractor or truck.

Computed on 1921 fuel prices the cost of power per acre, according to the U. S. Department of Agriculture, for plowing with horses as compared with $1.72 with tractors, showed 34 with horses and 50 with tractors, disking in combination, 72 with horses as against 86 with tractors, harrowing 186 with horses as against 206 with tractors, drawing hay loader, 62c with horses and 91c with tractors, and drawing grain binder, 81c with horses, 96c with tractors.

The value of mechanical motive power is clearly recognized by the Horse Association of America, but after a thorough nationwide inquiry, it has been shown that the enforced displacement of the horse to farm work has been expensive to the farmer and has increased the cost of living to every family in America.

The various State Agricultural Colleges, particularly in the central west are stressing the point that horses should be bred for the desirable qualities which stand the test of long hard service, an infusion of thorughbred blood giving spirit, vigor and endurance to the colder breeds.

George Lane, head of a $1,000,000 livestock ranch in Canada, in a recent letter to Wayne Dismore, Secretary of the Horse Association of America, said:

"I have crossed Thoroughbred sires on broodmare sires, on high grade Clydesdale mares, on mares bred by Percheron stallions out of broodmare sires, on mares that were 3/4 or 1/2 Percheron, and whenever I had a pure bred Percheron mare that would not settle to a Percheron sire I bred her to a Thoroughbred sire and usually got such mares in fact, the result being a crossbred thoroughbred Percheron. We have bred the female produce resulting from these various crosses to both thoroughbred and Percheron sires so that we have horses carrying various degrees of thoroughbred blood from 1/4 to 3/4 bred from mares of various types and blood sires. From long experience in the use of such horses, and our actual breeding operations,
I know that the thoroughbred cross on any draft mare increases quality, endurance, and length of life.

The manufacturers of mechanical motive power already has caused an enormous drain upon our available labor resources, so that every true a-farmer, or business man, who a mechanical power unit which he does not absolutely need, he is simply bidding up the labor market against himself. Nor can the market for course grains be left out of consideration.
The displacement of horses occurring in the years 1910 to 1920, destroyed an annual market for over 113 million bushels of oats, 70 million bushels of corn and 4 1/2 million tons of hay—more than the average total export per year on these items. The curtailment of city demand runs off not only the outlet for surplus farm horses, but this great market for staple farm products.

YOU CAN'T TRUST CALOMEL AT ALL

It's Quicksilver, Salivates, Causes Rheumatism and Bone Decay.

The next time if calomel you take may salivate you. It may shock your liver or start liver troubles. Calomel is dangerous. It is mercury, quicksilver. It causes liver trouble like dynamite, causes liver poisoning. Calomel attacks the liver and should never be put into your system.

If you feel bloated, constipated, and all kinds of things, just go to your druggist and get a box of Dr. Williams' Liver Tonic for a few days which is a harmless vegetable preparation for dangerous calomel. Take a small one and if it doesn't give you liver and straiten you up better and quicker than any calomel and without making you sick, you just go home and get your money.

Don't take calomel. It can not be trusted any more than a leopard or a wildcat. Take Williams' Liver Tonic which straightens you right up and makes you feel fine. No salts necessary. Give it to the children because it is perfectly harmless and can not salivate. Advertisement.

POULTRY

HATCHET BEST FOR SICK HENS

Many Reasons Enumerated Why Allowing Fowls Should Be Killed Rather Than Cured.

(Presented by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The most reliable and profitable method for curing sick poultry is the hatchet. At least that is the opinion of a large number of prominent poultry breeders. They claim that it does not give the sick bird a chance to become a carrier of disease, and it is a sure way to keep the flock healthy. The reason is that it takes no time to cure, and the bird is not a danger to the flock. It is a sure way to keep the flock healthy. The hatchet is the best way to cure sick poultry.

Profits Are Greater Where Houses Are Kept in Sanitary Condition.

an effort recently is at hand. Prevention in most cases is not difficult, but costly, and pays big dividends.

The poultry house is subject to a number of diseases, some of which spread rapidly and cause big losses. The birds may also be infested with various parasites, some of which live on the surface of the body and others in the various parts of the interior. Such parasites, whether they are outside or inside workers are dangerous because they take a part of the nourishment which should be used to put on flesh or to produce eggs, and also because of irritation and in some cases of the parts they attack.

The contagious diseases caused by germs and the weakness and loss of flesh caused by the larger parasites are the most important conditions which the poultryman must consider in order to keep his birds in health. These germs and parasites can be kept down by suitable preventative measures and the aim of study of the diseases should be to learn prevention rather than cure. Medicines may be given advantage at times but as a rule, as has been suggested, it is better to kill the sufferer. There is another reason not yet mentioned that makes the killing of sick birds desirable. Birds that first contract diseases are apt to be the weakest ones in the flock and should be culled out.

The more birds kept on a farm or plot of ground and the more they are crowded the greater the danger from contagious and parasitic and the more important the measures for exterminating, eradicating, and preventing development of these causes of disease.

The best way to do this is to secure eggs from a flock that has shown no indication of contagious disease for at least a year. If precautions are taken to keep the eggs absolutely clean and they are hatched in a thoroughly cleaned incubator the young chicks will have a much better chance. They will also grow up with a better chance of escaping disease if they are raised in clean houses and kept upon ground where poultry has not run for some time.

Sometimes these directions cannot be followed exactly. If all the available ground has been recently used for poultry, fowls should be taken from that part which is to be used for the new flock, a good cutting of freshly shorn hair applied to the surface and a few days later it should be plucked. This it should be plucked three or four times with intervals of a week and finally killed in a small pen. It is a few days the greater part of the germs will be destroyed, and it is better to have the pen cleaned by poultry until a winter has passed.

It is more difficult to raise a new flock free from parasites if the eggs are hatched by birds, free hens may carry lice and mites and various parasites. For this reason it is a good idea to select hens for brooding from a flock free from disease and pests.

To keep germs and parasites from developing to a great extent, poultry houses need to be cleaned frequently and the drinking fountains and feed troughs need a weekly washing with boiling water or other disinfectant. If any lice or mites are found on the birds or in their houses, the roosts and adjoining parts of the walls must be painted with commercial carbolicum or a mixture of 1 quart kerosene and 1 teaspoonful of crude carbolic acid or crude creosote, or the house may be whitewashed with freshly slaked lime and sprayed with kerosene emulsion. Dust the fowl with sodium fluoride or lice powder.

The Kidnaped Peasant Girl

By R. RAY BAKER

Copyright, 1922, by Marion News Service, Inc.

It was all very well, the young girl thought, until she found out that the man at the wheel of the auto took to him. Then the girl let out a scream that the man was taking her and she fled through the pine woods.

The kidnaper had driven up beside the road, and without a word had placed his arm around the girl, the girl was a screaming wail on her lips. The man had seemed like a good fellow, but after that well, she really was frightened.

The man was in genuine distress, he intended to prove it as a knight, but it was rather in the nature of a bluff. He was only trying to get the girl to go with him. He was a man of red and gold, a man of a good heart and a good head, but he was a kidnaper and a thief.

The girl appeared to be a person of common sense. Her eyes were the red and gold and her hair was the red and gold, but she was a kidnaper and a thief.

"Why, what's the matter?" he asked, looking at her with a smile.

"Matter?" she exclaimed indignantly. "That you don't you are carrying this woman to the law?"

"You are?" he asked. "You don't mean to say that a man can't take a girl to the law?"

She laughed scornfully.

"Enough," he said, "you're taking a lot for granted. Perhaps you're a kidnaper. You think that's all. No man in his right mind would talk and act like you."

Garvin Haskell really was puzzled by the girl's behavior. What was the matter with Maxine? Had she agreed to elope from the costume ball with him? Had she changed her mind after all the carefully arranged plans? Well, he knew she was a kidnaper, but it did not seem reasonable that she would back out now.

There was no good reason for an elopement, anyhow. Maxine's parents were dead, and Garvin's folks never had displayed an inclination to meddle in his affairs of the heart. He had enough money in his own right to care for a wife, and in fact his father and mother were rather anxious for him to settle down.

But Maxine had insisted on eloping. In order to have a taste of romance, she wanted to surprise her own with whom she was staying while visiting in Saratoga, for one thing, and she wanted some excitement when she took the marriage vows.

Garvin had been trying ever since he became acquainted with her two months ago to induce her to leave him. She had just been off laughing until the tears came for the wicked talk.

"Yes, I'll marry you, Garvin," she said, "but it's got to be an elopement. You dress as a knight and I'll be a peasant girl. After the fifth dance I'll meet you under the big oak tree on the lawn and we'll elope. The arrangements for a husband, of course, are up to you."

"And I'll call when?" he asked the elated girl.

"You wait 'till all," she said. "I'll go to the dance with some of the girls and you go alone. That'll make it more romantic."

Garvin made the necessary arrangements, which included marriage by a minister in the neighboring town of Charlotte. He dressed as a knight to the best of his ability and went to the dance alone. And there was his beloved, dressed in the peasant costume, exactly fitting the description Maxine had given him. Yes, she had met him under the oak at the appointed time, and he had carried her off in the auto. And when he pulled up beside the road to make a turn as his car, she was awakened.

They sat in silence for a few moments after the conversation that followed the elopement, and it began to dawn on Garvin that there must be a hidden purpose.

"What are you really doing?" he asked her.

"Not if you will do the same," she answered.

For really he remained the same, and at once the girl lifted the curtain. Yes, it was Maxine. In the pale moonlight her countenance showed up as lovely as ever, except that it seemed a trifle older, but no doubt, that was due to the shock of being almost killed. That was not quite consistent either, for Garvin never had supposed Maxine to be that unselfish. He scrutinized her closely and she returned the stare. Yes, it was Maxine's eyes, and the nose and hair were hers. But why the change in her attitude?

"Maxine," he began, clearing his throat, "I don't—"

"Maxine," she exclaimed, "I'm not Maxine. What made you think I was?"

The moon's rays became brighter now, due to the shifting of some clouds, and the girl's face showed plainly. Yes, there was a difference.

She was older than was Maxine, although not much older.

"Well, how—what—?" he stammered. "That's what I say," she exclaimed. "How—what—?"

"It's got to be that," he declared. "Do you happen to know Maxine Haskell?"

"I certainly do. Since my younger sister. But she lost touch yesterday shortly after I arrived to visit Aunt Sarah."

Garvin's heart sank. So this was the outcome of the carefully laid elopement plan. He stepped on the accelerator and turned the car out in the road, leaving it for the night. For some time he lay awake and worried, wondering what had happened.

By Maxine had gone back an hour. What he could do was to wait until he was alone and then to go to the house by the name of Maxine.

KING LION'S BONE

"How, how, how," cried King Lion, "how can you tell me something so good about the lion's bone?"

"What was that, Your Majesty?" asked the lioness from the next cage.

"How can you tell me something so good about the lion's bone?"

"I don't know any more than I have told you about the lion's bone. I don't know any more than I have told you about the lion's bone."

"A dog, a dog, a dog," said King Lion, "a dog, a dog, a dog."

and sell ten years of age or over, engaged in gainful occupations. A little while ago when the number of federal employees was even larger than it is now, one person out of every 68 in the United States who had any sort of a job at all was working for the government. These statistics are based on recent estimates of the Bureau of the Census in anticipation of the release of the fourth general census.

Prior to the outbreak of the war, in 1911, the number of men and women in civil positions in the executive branch was approximately 1,200,000. In 1916 it had grown to 1,500,000. In 1917, the year entry into the war, it was 1,800,000. The figure for 1919 was 2,000,000. This number on July 31, 1920, was 2,100,000.

These figures are considerably approximations. Since the war, the number of federal employees has increased. The increase in the number of federal employees has been due to the growth of the government and to the fact that the government has been able to attract a large number of men and women to its service.

The number of federal employees has increased in the past few years. This is due to the fact that the government has been able to attract a large number of men and women to its service. The number of federal employees has increased in the past few years.

One third of your life is allotted to sleep. Do you get your share?

The most important period in the process of applying nutrition to the repair of the body is while you are asleep. For the most favorable transformation of digested food into nerve and cell tissue, so doctors tell us, sleep is absolutely essential.

Is it any wonder that those who suffer from lack of proper sleep are weak, pale and lacking in energy or ambition?

One of the causes of insomnia is nerve-irritation from tea and coffee drinking. Tea and coffee both contain caffeine, which has a tendency to cause undue stimulation. The irritating effect of caffeine often results in insomnia, depression, and a weakened nervous system.

You can easily overcome these troubles by drinking Postum instead of tea or coffee. Postum is a delicious, satisfying cereal beverage, and it is absolutely free from caffeine, or any other harmful substance.

Ask your grocer for Postum. Drink this delicious, refreshing beverage for ten days. Then see if you do not feel better and more clear headed, and if you do not sleep better at night—as so many other people have proved for themselves.

Postum comes in two forms: Instant Postum (in use) made instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages of larger bulk, for those who prefer to make the drink while the meal is being prepared) made by boiling for 20 minutes.

CHAPTER XX

The End of It All

The sun shone very brightly that day, and the snow began to melt on the places that were not shaded. When he returned with Elizabeth from the great of David Moreland's mountain, John K. Dale took a rocker before the fire and sat there thinking, until the midday meal was over, he resumed his chair and sat there thinking, until the afternoon was half gone.

Then he called Elizabeth to him. "Will you go to my son and tell him I wish to see him?" he said. And he added under his breath: "I think it is best that they should know."

Elizabeth heard that which he had said to himself as well as she heard that which he had said to her. Should know! Know what? She had a sudden wild fear that Mrs. Dale had broken her promise never to breathe a word of the truth concerning the Adam Hall affair. Nevertheless, she put on her hat and her gloves and went to Bill Dale's office.

Dale sat with his elbows on his desk and with his head in his hands. To all appearances, he was unaware of the presence of the girl in the doorway.

She spoke, "Bill!" He sat up straight and faced her. He seemed surprised.

"Well, Habs?" "Your father wants you," in a low voice. "Has he got something to tell you that will make you think almost nothing of me?"

Young Dale frowned. "What is it?" "I'd rather he'd tell you about it. Bill Dale, I don't think I could bear to tell you myself."

She turned and was about to hasten away, when he called to her: "Wait!"—and she waited.

"Has it," he asked, "anything to do with your marriage to Jimmy Payne?"

"No!"

He arose and put on his broad-rimmed hat. "I'll admit," he smiled, "that I'm worse than a grumpy woman for poking my nose into other people's affairs—when are you going to marry Jimmy, Habs?"

The answer came quickly. "Never!"

"Never!" repeated Elizabeth, very quietly.

"Never!" paroled Dale.

"Never!" cried Elizabeth, exasperated.

"Goodness!" laughed Dale. "You're dramatic, or vehement, or both. May I talk home with you, Habs?"

"Yes, sir," promptly. "If you want to."

They set out across the snow-covered roadways, and neither spoke another word until they had reached Ben Littleford's log house. The girl looked at him queerly as they entered. After he knew—

Old Dale still sat before the fire, and near him sat John Moreland. Old Dale motioned toward an inside door.

"Please close it, Elizabeth," he requested, and she obeyed. "Now sit down. I've got something to tell the three of you. And I fancy it will interest all of you."

The two who had just come to look chairs at the fireside. After a moment, John K. Dale began.

"You've often wondered, Bill, about that savage streak—as you choose to call it—that is in you. You inherited it. Much of that which we are it is claimed, is inherited, and it must be correct, like begets like, of course. But there is no savage streak in you, Bill. You are hot-headed that's all. Your virtues overbalance that, by far. I have never seen another man who had a greater love for honesty and fair play, or a greater hatred for all that is false and dishonest."

He turned to Elizabeth. "You, too, are a hot-headed one, but you are a good deal more honest and fair than I am."

He turned to John. "You, too, are a hot-headed one, but you are a good deal more honest and fair than I am."

you how you came by these fine qualities and the hot-headedness."

Elizabeth Littleford sat wide-eyed, tense, half breathless. If he meant to tell it why didn't he tell it? Why did he beat about the bush like that?

"Bill, this is hard for me. It brings back a terrible thing. You know about David Moreland. . . . When I awoke that morning and found him lying dead at my feet, drunk and dead, I wished that I, too, were dead. . . . That great and silent wilderness smothered me. I thought that I could hear voices calling to me, saying—"

"Call! Call!"

"They came from the laurel thickets, from the trees overhead, from the ground, from everywhere. You see, I wasn't all bad, even to my wild-out days. Then I thought of the law, and I ran."

"But the cry of a child from the cabin I was leaving halted me before I had gone thirty yards. David Moreland's wife had left him with a baby only a few weeks old which I didn't pay any particular attention to until that morning that black morning. At that time there was an other house for miles around. I couldn't leave the child there to die of starvation, after killing its father. So I went back and got the baby, and of its clothing and took it away with me. I left it at a farmhouse down in the lowland, and went to another city and started life afresh."

"That later I married, and shortly after that I went to the farmer and persuaded him to let me adopt the child. I brought it up as my own, and educated it as a sort of compensation. And I came to love it. But it was years before my wife loved it. She didn't like children then. But she does now. She is paying now, and I am paying. What you understand, Bill—don't you understand?"

"There was a choke in his voice toward the last. Bill Dale went to his feet. His eyes were wide, but he did not seem unhappy; and for that Elizabeth was grateful. John Moreland sat as still, with his bearded, viking face as expressionless as though he had known it all along.

"And so I really am in my own country," cried Bill Dale. "I am a Moreland, and the Morelands really are my own people."

"Yes, you are in your own country, and you are a Moreland—and your baby name was David," said John K. Dale.

It was then that John Moreland spoke.

"Bill, when I first saw you, you made me think of my brother the day he was married. I ain't never forgot that. I certainly ain't surprised none at all. We didn't know about the baby. Therefore Joe told me the baby had died."

"And now, now," pleaded old Dale, his voice breaking, "may that you forgive me?"

Bill Dale, David Moreland's boy, took beside the old sheepskin-covered rocker, took the old coal brazier and in both his own and bent his head over it.

"It all right," he said thickly. "It's all right."

Elizabeth Littleford arose and stole blindly out of the house. Her foot steps told her, quite without her realizing where she was going, across the meadow and to the river above the blossomed spinnery. And there on that sacred spot, where she had first felt her heart leap at the sound of Bill Dale's voice, she sank down to a heap in the snow and cried, and cried.

Twilight was gathering rapidly, but she did not notice it. She did not notice, either, that the air was growing chilly under the approach of the mountain night. To her a warm sun was shining above in a bright blue vault, to her the spirit of summer was everywhere. In her ears there was the liquid song of a woodcock, the sweet twittering of wood thrushes, the low humming of wild bees. The peering of the crystal waters between the two boulders above the pool made music to her, and blended with it she seemed to hear the voice of a big, strong man—

"I was thinking of the difference between you and some other women I know."

Then a ray of hope shone into her heart. Bill Dale was really a Moreland, and therefore of the hill blood even as she was of the hill blood and that should make them more nearly equal. She told herself that he wouldn't be so apt to condemn her for being able to take a human life easily as would be some of the blood would be; he would be more apt to understand. And yet the woman he had known were gentle, tender and kind, like her for instance, Patricia McLaughlin. When the ray of hope died within her, and she bent her head and sobbed again.

Her very hands began to tremble as she sat in the moon at her side and she did not feel the cold. Suddenly she realized that her hand was full of shavings, whittlings. Some men had been sitting there whittling with a pocket knife—it must have been a man, for who ever heard of a woman whittling? She felt in the snow with both hands, and found more whittlings—there were bushels of whittlings, it seemed to her, lying there under the snow.

Then she wondered—wondered who it could have been.

It was a lie dark now, but the moon was not yet up. A great, bright star blazed above David Moreland's tomb like a beacon fire. She heard the muffled sounds of slow masculine footsteps in the snow behind her. She did not turn her head. In her soul she knew it could be but one man.

Bill Dale's head was down and he looked as though he either knew or cared whittling he went. Then he saw the dark heap on the river's bank before him and he halted. He knew in his soul that it could be but one woman.

Dale went on and sat down on a stone the size of a small barrel that lay at the river's rim.

"Habs?" he said. "It was the muffled call of his heart in the springtime of his life."

"Who done all o' this whittlin', Bill?" asked Elizabeth.

"I did," softly.

"But I thought you were so busy here! It's nobody but idlers, of course, that whittles—that is, most of the time it's nobody but idlers that whittles."

"But I'm not busy as Sundays, y' know," replied Dale.

"Tell me this," Elizabeth asked pointedly. "What made you come to this one spot to do your whittlin'? Couldn't you whittle up there in my daddy's cabin yard?"

He answered her enthusiastically. "Because I like to be here. This place is a shrine to me. It was here that I first loved you, Habs. Now you tell me this: Why did you come to this particular spot to sit down in the snow? There's snow in your daddy's cabin yard!"

Said Elizabeth, in a voice that sounded smothered. "Because I like to be here—this place is a shrine to me, too—it was here that I first loved you, Bill Dale!"

"Then why," he demanded, "won't you marry me?"

"Because it was me that did—Adam Hall!"

She went on, and though emotion had set every fibre of her to quivering, she did not fall into the old bill talk, which was proof of the magnificence of her.

"I thought you wouldn't want me if you knew that I did that, and I couldn't marry you without telling you. But you know now. And do whatever you feel like doing or saying, you can't hurt me. I can never be hurt any more."

Bill Dale shot back. "Truly, this was a day of surprises for him. He stooped and caught her up."

"A real woman!" he said happily, straightening with her in his arms. "A real old gold pure gold woman! You loved me well enough to kill a man to save me and wouldn't let me know it! Wouldn't let me know it! Well, it's a mystery sure enough. But perhaps it's because women are so fine and so far above men that they can't understand them. Well, Habs, kitten, what I drag you to the altar, or will you go with me at your own free will?"

Illinois Central System Calls State Control of Rates Backward Step

There has been much discussion lately of bills introduced into Congress to take away from the Interstate Commerce Commission authority over state rates. The proposed legislation, it is believed, is unprogressive, impracticable and illegal.

Our Federal Constitution grew out of a generally accepted feeling on the part of the people that commerce among states should be free. Our forefathers were convinced that nothing but ruin and chaos would result from a system which allowed one state to put restrictions upon the commerce of another state. The Federal Government was founded upon the theory that commerce and trade were national subjects and should not be subjected to local conditions. To that end the Constitution confers the exclusive power on Congress to regulate commerce among the states. By a long line of Supreme Court decisions it is now thoroughly settled that a state must not be permitted to make any rate or regulation which will interfere with interstate commerce. The power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to condemn such rates which do discriminate against interstate commerce has been repeatedly upheld.

As a practical matter, everyone knows that a railway system traversing a number of states is operated as a unit. All its property is used in both interstate and intrastate commerce. Its revenues from both are commingled, its expenses as between the two classes of commerce cannot be accurately separated. It ought not to maintain upon its line as many separate and distinct systems of rates as there are states which it traverses. In the case of the Illinois Central System, passing through and touching fourteen different states, it is obvious at a glance that it ought not to have fifteen systems of rates, one applicable to interstate commerce, and fourteen others applicable to the commerce of the different states which it serves. If such a theory is sound, so far as the practical effect is concerned, it would be equally sound to say that each county traversed by the railroad should have the right to make a separate system of rates. Of course there is a political difference as between the relation of counties to states and states to nation, but as a practical matter, the two situations are analogous.

No one has ever been able to give any good reason why a passenger making an intrastate journey should pay a rate lower than or different from that of the passenger making an interstate journey, both occupying the same seat and receiving precisely the same accommodations. Railroads in the United States have for a long time struggled against this divided authority. They have been subjected to a number of conflicting regulations and have been greatly embarrassed and inconvenienced by the necessity of obeying the mandates of various state commissions on the subject of rates, many of which conflict with one another. In some instances state commissions have frankly announced their purpose to give to the people of their own state an advantage over the people of another state by making a discriminatory rate adjustment. In one western state, a state commission put out an order requiring the railroads to put up placards in their stations explaining how an interstate passenger can defeat the interstate rate by buying a ticket to a border line point, getting off the train and rejoining across the border. All these considerations induced Congress in the Transportation Act, to provide more convenient machinery than had heretofore existed whereby discriminations against interstate commerce could be removed, and whereby the states would be required to contribute their fair share toward the expense of maintaining the transportation machine.

While present legislation does not go so far, yet it is recognized by all thoughtful students of the problem that there should be but one body with power to regulate rates and that the national body. There would be still left to the state commissions many important duties in connection with their police power. Their jurisdiction would be unimpaired as to service matters, such as operation of intrastate trains, character of station facilities, crossings, etc.

It is a great mistake to suppose that the control of rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission would make it more troublesome and expensive for patrons of the railroads to obtain relief. The Interstate Commerce Commission has more than a thousand expert employees drawn from every section of the country, thoroughly familiar with local problems and competent to assist in the solution of rate questions. A petition to the Interstate Commerce Commission will in nearly every case bring one of these examiners almost to the door of the petitioner, where the complaint can be heard. The proceeding is informal, the expense is less, generally speaking, than is involved in going to the state capital to present a matter to the state commission, and no reason exists why the public generally should not look with favor upon a system which will insure fair consistent and harmonious treatment of the rate structure of the country.

The removal of the war tax January 1 has had the effect of making a substantial reduction in both freight and passenger rates, and the railroads have placed in effect reductions in freight rates on agricultural products. They will continue to make reductions as often as they are able to do so without impairing their ability to serve the public.

Constructive criticism and suggestions are invited
